Valley Town (Motion picture) Educational Film Institute of New York University. Released by New York University Film Library, 1941.
30 min., sd., b&w, 16 mm.
With guide.
Summary: A documentary study of workers displaced by automatic machinery in a typical American steel town in the 1920's and 1930's. Follows the development of the town and depicts the life of its people as having been bound up in the fortunes of the mill. Points out that with the introduction of labor-saving devices the men were no longer needed in the mill, and shows how war made such a demand on manpower that there was a scarcity of men adequately trained for the jobs. Suggests the need for the constant training of adults.

19 min., sd., color, 16 mm.
French version released under the title Jean refuse de manger! Pourquoi?
Summary: Through the story of 5-year-old Tommy, discusses the problem of children who won't eat, and what can be done about it. Shows Tommy, who should be hungry, just picking at his food. Going back to early babyhood, traces in detail how eating habits are formed, explaining that individual likes and dislikes must be taken into consideration, and that the worst habit of all is the permanent battle over food. In despair Tommy's mother takes him to the doctor, who explains that she is really the cause of the problem because she has been tense and impatient with Tommy from the start. Points out the need for building a new atmosphere of cooperation, friendliness, and understanding of Tommy's personal requirements at mealtimes.
